

nutrients and vitamins is added to oxygen, which is painlessly blasted onto the face. The oxygen works its way past the skin's barrier to deliver the active ingredients into the lower levels of the epidermis and promote new collagen growth.

"It works because the oxygen delivers five-layer penetration, plus the nutrient-packed serums I use are very active," she explains. "Nothing bad can live in oxygen and as a result the skin really glows – and the results are long-lasting."

Her philosophy

"I work with crystals, colour therapy and reflexology, and I mix and match products to suit each person. I don't often stick to protocols; I look at the whole person, not just their skin."

Unique technique

The Oxygen facial uses organic ingredients mixed with Valente's energising approach. The oxygen works as a carrier for the nutrients and vitamins, which are absorbed deep into the lower levels of the skin.

What she uses

Valente works with 100 per cent organic products by luxe beauty brand Éminence and clinical skincare expert Peter Thomas Roth, depending on each client's needs.

Juliet Stewart
New York

After years wowing the industry as one of the US's biggest make-up artists, working for Saks Fifth Avenue and Prescriptives in New York, Juliet Stewart decided to add skincare to her area of expertise and is now NYC's most favoured facialist. "It's like building a house – if the foundation is not laid properly, nothing will ever be right, no matter how much money one spends to make it right," explains the 47-year-old.

Stewart's Complex C Facial is renowned for its amazing results, using vitamins C, A and E to boost collagen in the skin while protecting it from free radicals – perfect for stressed city complexions.

Now Stewart has a clientele that reads like a guest list at the Oscars, and she has spent years perfecting her technique to find the best ingredients to keep clients looking radiant and healthy. "I like to use products that do not contain Retinol or glycolic acid," she says. "These contribute to inflammation, and long-term use will have a negative effect on the skin."

Her philosophy

"For a facial to be very effective, it not only requires excellent ingredients, but more importantly it relies on the ability and character of the aesthetician."

Unique technique

All Stewart's facials include reflexology, a hand treatment and a shoulder and scalp massage for an all-round experience. She believes total relaxation is also key, which has influenced the design of her serene Broadway spa.

What she uses

Super-luxe Babor products are the mainstay of Stewart's treatments. After years of research on rare ingredients, she's also developing her own skincare range, to be launched next year.

Margaret Hema
New Zealand

While humble New Zealander Margaret Hema prefers not to disclose her celebrity clients, we've heard that Liv Tyler tops the list of star fans, so it's hard not to be intrigued by the outgoing redhead. Originally from an aromatherapy background and trained as an aesthetician, Hema's famed signature facial is a combination of deep massage and lymphatic drainage that's tailor-made to each individual client.

Hema uses her own home-grown range of organic products, created after years of experimenting, which contain natural ingredients such as lavender essential oil, manuka honey, kiwi-seed oil and pure manuka oil – all of which help to achieve age-defying results.

"I have intellectual property on my secret recipes," laughs the facialist when asked what makes her treatments so effective. "The secret is in the combination. Organic oils and the ingredients in my blends help to achieve a perfect pore structure and moisture in the layers of the connective tissue. The end result is even, firm skin tone on the face, neck and shoulders."

Her philosophy

"My thinking has always been that skin should be treated like beautiful fabric."

Unique technique

Hema's method does not include cleaning milks, foaming cleansers, exfoliation, toners, clay masks or steaming machines. She also shuns water, preferring to use essential oils to nourish the skin.

What she uses

Hema has spent years creating the products for her eponymous range, with 98 per cent of the ingredients home-grown in her native New Zealand. The secret mix of essential oils and organic compounds leaves skin hydrated and glowing.
